MEDIA STATEMENT ON SUPERIOR COURT’S DECISION TO TERMINATE TEMPORARY RELOCATION PROGRAM

Today, the Los Angeles Superior Court terminated the County of Los Angeles’ injunction extending the period for returning home for residents who chose to relocate as a result of the Aliso Canyon natural gas leak, stayed until March 22, 2016. SoCalGas issued the following statement in response:

“The court’s decision provides much-needed clarity to Porter Ranch and the surrounding communities to help local residents return to their normal lives. Air quality and health experts – including those from the county’s own public health department – have been saying for weeks that the air quality in the area is at normal levels, and is similar to the air quality in other parts of the county. Testing by a third party of over 70 homes, sponsored by SoCalGas, showed no elevated levels of methane inside these homes, and did not detect mercaptans or other sulfur compounds associated with natural gas. We hope this will give peace of mind to relocated Porter Ranch families as they rejoin the community and resume their normal lives.

“Currently relocated residents in hotels will be fully reimbursed for relocation expenses through Friday, March 25, 2016 at hotel checkout time. We will continue to support temporarily relocated residents as they return home, through our Community Resource Center and expanded Community Liaison program. We hope that today’s court decision will help provide additional certainty and assurance to the residents of Porter Ranch.”
